So you all know exactly what I did as soon as I finished my last post right? I cut open my sock club package (and then remembered the handknit socks that had been sitting in the sink in the laundry room for the last hour while I was typing and rushed to wring them out and hang them up) and pulled out the yarny goodness inside.

The sock club so far has been pretty representative of the many shades and variations of pink but we'd been promised a 'manly' colourway and I was very pleased to see that this month's kit was it. Meet Pining 4 Ewe - a green so dark that when I opened it up in the evening I first thought it was black.

This skein of yarn makes me so happy. I love knitting socks for Rob but whenever I go hunting for appropriate yarn I see a million colours I would wear on my feet and perhaps two or three (if I'm lucky) for him. I'm sure bright colours are more fun to dye but it is lovely to discover rich and beautiful darks. The manliness of this kit goes well beyond the yarn though. The patterns are manly too.
