

Finished and Started

Tuesday, 30 October 2012 03:30

We had a nice full weekend. Not too busy but with plenty to do. I don't seem to have taken many pictures of it but there were visits with family, good meals and some errands run. I also wound a bunch of skeins of yarn into balls and did quite a bit of knitting. The little sweater I was making for my niece is finished and delivered and I was finally able to get started on her Christmas stocking. These stockings are a family tradition (I made one a few years ago for my sister's husband when they got married) and I've been anxious to get working on this one. I really wanted the sweater to be done before Hannah grew out of it though so I kept at it and didn't let myself get distracted.

I'm not sure what the cats were looking at when I took this picture - possibly a small bird getting frozen crabapples from our tree - they look so intense.
